Question: 1

The ISO/IEC 27701 standard contains a chapter dedicated to additional guidance that aligns with the ISO/IEC 27002 standard. What type of recommendations are not included in this chapter?

- a) Develop privacy policies separate from or combined with information security policies
- b) Ensure at least awareness training for all coworkers that handle or process personal data
- c) Label all data clearly to identify where personal data is stored or otherwise processed
- d) Plan internal and external audits with a specific interval depending on the audit scope

Answer: d

Question: 2

A hospital outsources its printing of patient invoices to a printing company. The printing company also prints invoices for other organizations. Due to an error, names and addresses were mixed up when they were sorted at the printing company, and a number of invoices were sent to the wrong patients.

The hospital had carefully analyzed their own processes. The hospital had a robust verification process in place and has contractual agreements with the printing company.

Why will the hospital be held responsible by the supervisory authority?

- a) Because the contract determines this
- b) Because the hospital is the controller
- c) Because the mix-up is between patients
- d) Because the verification has gone wrong

Answer: b

Question: 3

Why should top management review the progress of the privacy information management system (PIMS)?

- a) To ensure that the PIMS conforms with all relevant legal requirements
- b) To ensure that the PIMS has enough privacy controls to mitigate risks
- c) To ensure that the PIMS is audited regularly and is producing documents
- d) To ensure that the PIMS is effective and meets corporate requirements

Answer: d

Question: 4

When a controller and a processor sign a contract for the processing of personal data, they both have specific responsibilities. Some of these responsibilities are prescribed by the GDPR and others can be arranged in the contract.

According to the GDPR, when does the processor always need written authorization by the controller?

- a) When the processor contracts a company to protect data during transfers
- b) When the processor contracts a third party to process personal data
- c) When the processor implements a new method to collect personal data
- d) When the processor implements a new method to delete personal data

Answer: b

Question: 5

It is fundamental to a privacy information management system (PIMS), both in the short and long term, to be able to demonstrate how corporate policies, operating procedures, and work instructions are formulated.

This ensures that actions are traceable to management decisions and policies, and that the results are reproducible. Which requirement of the PIMS is this referring to?

- a) Audit
- b) Documentation
- c) Management review
- d) Statement of applicability (SoA)

Answer: b
